Christopher Rootham Publishes New Labour and Employment Law Resource

OTTAWA, September 10, 2007 — Nelligan O'Brien Payne is proud to announce that Christopher Rootham, associate lawyer, has published his first book titled: Labour and Employment Law in the Federal Public Service.

Sean McGee, Labour Law Practice Group leader at Nelligan O'Brien Payne, said, "We are very proud that Chris took on this task and put together a resource that explains the complex laws governing the federal public service. At times these laws and regulations can seem like a labyrinth, but Chris had the sense that what was needed was a single volume that would help people to understand and decode this challenging legal regime".

Chris practices within the areas of Labour and Employment Law and has been with Nelligan O'Brien Payne since his call to the Ontario Bar in 2002. He also acts as the Director of Research for the firm, and coordinates our Student Articling Program.

Irwin Law is publishing this 592-page resource. To order a copy, please e-mail contact@irwinlaw.com.
